

Louisiana STUDENT STANDARDS SOCIAL STUDIES

This document is designed to assist educators in interpreting Louisiana’s 2011 social studies standards. It contains the prioritized content and concepts aligned to GLEs for each unit. The intent of this document is to clarify the essential content and concepts, allowing teachers more flexibility to focus on the three shifts prescribed in the social studies vision:

1. Use sources to learn content.
2. Make connections among people, events, and ideas across time and place.
3. Express informed claims supported by evidence from sources and outside knowledge.

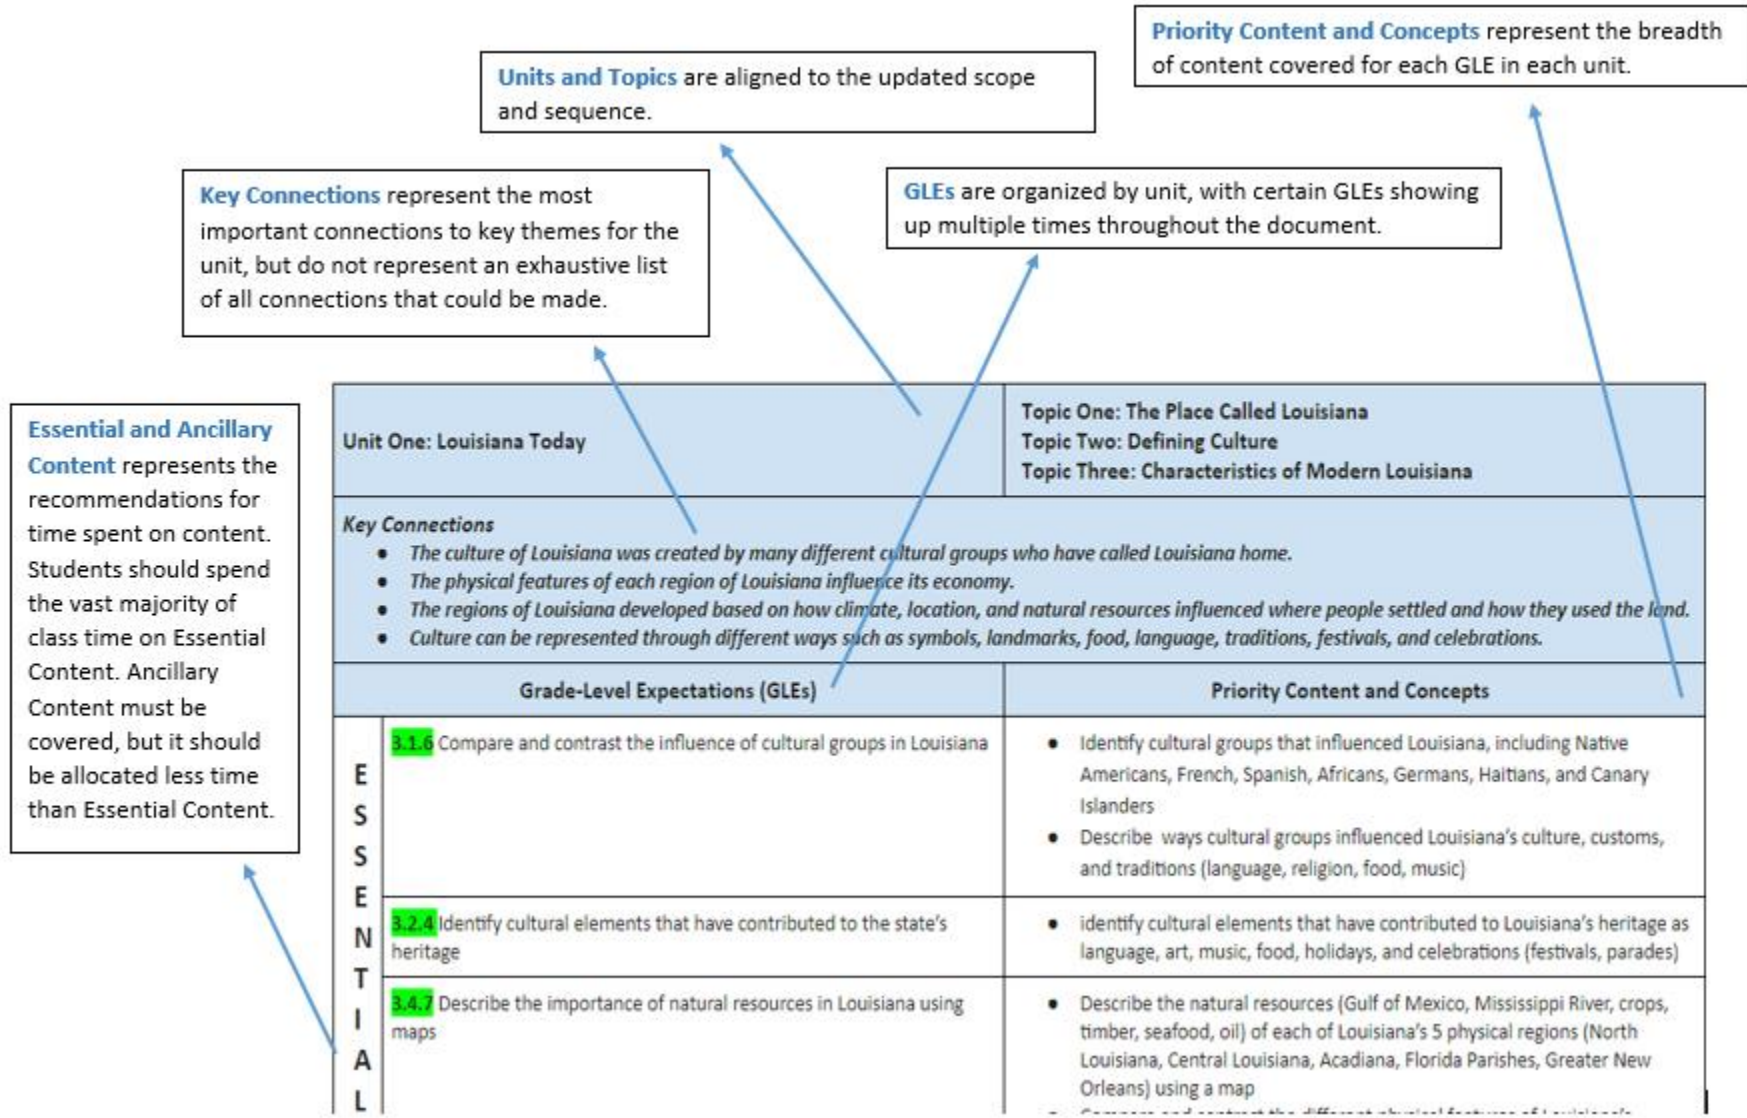

As a general caution, this companion document should not be used as a checklist. Teachers should not approach a unit by teaching each piece of prioritized content from the companion document in the order it is presented. The companion documents describe the range of content for a given GLE in each unit, but they do not reflect the sequence in which or method by which content should be taught. The content presented in the companion document is organized by standard and not integrated (as standards should be taught). If not taught in an integrated way, it is unlikely students will master course content or be prepared for the next course of study. Instead, the companion documents should be used alongside the instructional tasks in the Updated Social Studies Scope and Sequences or the curriculum adopted by the school. Companion documents should be used as a reference guide to ensure prioritized content is being adequately covered within a unit and to guide supplementation from current teaching resources.

This companion document is considered a “living” document, as we believe that teachers and other educators will find ways to improve the document as they use it. Please send feedback to louisianastandards@la.gov so that we may use your input when updating this guide.

How to Read Guide

The diagram below provides an overview of the information found in all units.

Priority Content and Concepts: Represents the content and concepts that should be taught for each GLE, aligned with assessment parameters. The priority content and concepts are organized by GLE – not sequentially. The Updated Social Studies Scope and Sequences, or other classroom curriculum, should be used as a guide for sequencing content.

Key Connections: Represent the important connections students should be making within the content and across units. Making connections among people, events, and ideas across time and place is one of the social studies shifts, and the purpose of including sample connections in this document is to help students and teachers implement this shift. The key connections are not an exhaustive list, but rather serve as a guide for the type of deeper understandings students should be forming.

Essential and Ancillary Content: Content is grouped into two categories, essential and ancillary. Essential content represents the most important concepts to be taught in each unit to further connections and understandings of the main ideas in each social studies course. Teachers should spend the majority of their time teaching the essential content. Ancillary content includes skills that are used in support of main ideas (such as map skills which are necessary to interpret and analyze maps), review content within a unit (some GLEs may be essential in some units and ancillary in others), and historical thinking skills (which should be practiced every unit). Ancillary content should not be cut from instruction because, without it, students will not be prepared for their next course of study. The essential and ancillary content distinction can be used to help teachers prioritize how much time to spend on different concepts.

A note on teaching the historical thinking skills standards: There are many acceptable options for teaching historical thinking skills. The content provided in the companion documents aligned to historical thinking skills is purposefully broad. Teachers may make adjustments to how historical thinking skills are taught to fit the needs of their classroom. While historical thinking skills are categorized as ancillary content, it is critical that teachers teach the prioritized content in each unit through the historical thinking skills standards. In U.S. History, we've included concepts that push the bounds of the course and represent high-quality instruction into the content of US.1.2. Since these concepts represent opportunities for instruction, they are options and not mandates.
