

The Louisiana Department of Education recently published our state's draft ESSA framework laying out five important challenges that our state and districts will address together in the coming years. One such challenge is the need to improve persistently struggling schools in the state. Louisiana has dramatically reduced the number of D and F schools in the past several years benefiting thousands of students who otherwise would have been assigned to a struggling school. At the same time, there remain schools in our state whose challenges are significant, and in Louisiana's 100 lowest performing schools, fewer than 12 percent of students are achieving mastery on our state's exam and less than two-thirds of students are graduating.

Research suggests that nearly every effective school improvement model relies on external support; yet, no catalogue of such supports exists. As such, the Department released a Request for Information (RFI) to identify partners within Louisiana and across the country that can provide best-in-class supports to districts and schools who are seeking to make dramatic improvement with their students.

A subset of the respondents to this RFI will be invited to a day-long School Redesign Summit where districts and partner organizations will begin a planning process focused on our state's struggling schools.

The RFI was sent to a total of 225 organizations including to every parish school system in Louisiana; 55% of these recipients work with students in Louisiana already. In addition, the RFI was distributed broadly through a press release. All recipients are welcome to forward the RFI to any organizations that may be interested in responding.
